1. Cooperation between the Republic of Mozambique and the Arab Fund, by H.E. Mr. Jose Antonio Matsinha, Mozambique’s Ambassador to Egypt.
There is an evident political will in Africa and the Arab world to strengthening institutional relations between the League of Arab States (LAS) and the African Union (AU) and pushing them towards a new phase; a phase of strategic partnership that forms the basis of joint Afro-Arab action based on the harmony of the historical, geographic and civilized conditions of the two Arab and African worlds, as well as the orientation the Afro-Arab policies reflecting the will to expand the capacity of the two organizations and their member states to deal with present and future circumstances. As a matter of fact, it is worth noting that the two organizations work hand in hand to solve various crises that come their way.

Ever since their establishment – LAS in 1945, the Organization of African Unity (OAU) in 1963 then AU in 2002- the two organizations contributed to developing political, economic, cultural, social, and commercial relations among the member states. The 1960s witnessed an Afro-Arab solidarity that succeeded in standing up to occupation and racism. Later, in the early 1970s, the pace of cooperation among Arab and African countries increased and included the economic, financial, and technical domains, and contribution to the process of socioeconomic development in Africa. This is through establishing Arab financial institutions that work in financial domains such as the Arab Bank for Economic Development in Africa (BADEA), the Arab Fund for Technical Assistance to African Countries, in addition to contributions by different Arab national funds. The first Afro-Arab Summit held in Cairo in 1977 manifested this cooperation and formed its institutions.

Today, as the second Afro-Arab Summit is held in Libya, on October 10, 2010, we steadily moved towards the phase of strategic partnership. This phase does not suffice the current effective and successful political cooperation. Rather, it is expanding towards agriculture, food security, commerce, investment and means of financing it, human development and capacity building. All these axes formed the basis of documents of the “Strategic Plan” and “Action Plan (2010 – 2016)” that was adopted by the Summit.

Moreover, in our planning for future cooperation, the Afro Arab cooperation did not forget the obstacles that impeded our march and our aspired partnership. That is why we were keen to set a six-year-agenda that would determine goals, phase priorities, plan, and programmes that we endeavour to jointly apply. The application would be in a studied manner that helps us gradually build an Afro-Arab economic group that truly reflects its development aspirations and realizes the interests of its peoples.

It has become necessary for us as Africans and Arabs to work on confirming our active participation in decision – making worldwide and redrafting the international agenda and its items. Salient these items are those related to us, our direct and joint interests, and the future of the security and prosperity. Our defence method is our belief in our potentials and joint Afro-Arab will.

Cooperation between the Republic of Mozambique and the Arab Fund for Technical Assistance to African Countries

By H.E. Mr. Jose Antonio Matsinha, Mozambique’s Ambassador to Egypt

The Republic of Mozambique is pleased to be one of the African Countries included in the programmes carried out by the Arab Fund for Technical Assistance to African Countries in its efforts to enhance the economic and social developments in and around Africa.

It is important to mention that the relationship between Mozambique and this region goes back to the end of the Sixth century when the Swahili-Arabs established forts to trade for gold, copper, and iron.

The Arab countries have played an important role in supporting the liberation struggle of Mozambique.

Today this relationship has extended not only with countries of the region but also with several regional organizations such as the Arab Fund.

In this regard, the signing of the Memorandum of Understanding in Maputo, in May 2007, between the Arab Fund for Technical Assistance to African Countries and the Government of Mozambique constitutes an important step towards the economic and social development of our country.

We have been witnessing during our relationship that the assistance provided by the Arab Fund to Mozambique is growing further and further, covering areas such as agriculture, health, education, Radio and Television, Information and Technology and cotton research.

However, it is our understanding that much more can be done. It is important to consider the specification of each one of the African Countries.

The dialogue which already exists has to continue on the spirit of Afro-Arab co-operation. The foundations are strong but needs to be strengthened in order to respond to the new challenges.

Therefore, the Arab Fund with the receiving countries should continue engaging their efforts in order to enhance and reinforce the mechanism of implementing the projects being carried out in the receiving countries.

In the near future, we would like to suggest that the Arab Fund could organize courses which would last for a bit longer in order to enable the participants to get more exposure and gain more experience.

Once again, we are sincerely grateful for the support and assistance of the Arab Fund and will continue to work to achieve our goals in the eradication of poverty in Mozambique.

Viva (Long live) Arab Fund for Technical Assistance to African Countries.

Cairo, 1st of March, 2012
When you return after a period of absence that exceeded seventeen years from the African field, to discuss topics related to Afro-Arab cooperation, and to the Arab Fund for Technical Assistance to African countries, as one of the main instruments of this cooperation (which are the files undertaken by the League of Arab States by virtue of its responsibilities as to the follow-up of the collective African-Arab relations); then you find that, all along this period, the Arab procession, except within the narrowest limits, did not move in this course whether for activating the devices of Arab-African cooperation, or improving the circumstances in which the Fund works and removing constraints imposed on its mission, notwithstanding the extensive studies elaborated in this regard, the numerous meetings held at different levels, and the political, economic and technical decisions adopted by them. You cannot help but believe that the issue is no longer about investigating the cause of the stumbling of the Afro-Arab cooperation process, nor about discussing ways to encourage and push that process technically and operationally, but it rather became related to the nature of African relations and the structural impediments facing them, as well as the dissimilarity of the parties’ conceptions concerning those relations along with their varying expectations and aspirations to reap their fruits. The issue is associated also to the disparity of views on the feasibility and scope of those relations in addition to the likely competition with foreign powers, the nature of the political links and economic interests between the States parties, and their effective appreciation of the method to be used for promoting this cooperation: would it be within the collective framework, the bilateral one, or both frameworks in parallel?

Hence, the stances of the Arab countries, in this regard, can be identified within three directions:

I- Arab states which are geographically located in the African continent, and are members of the African Union, contributing effectively in its activities, and abiding by its decisions. Some of these states share high strategic interests with some African countries and their water basins. Given the site, the link and interests, those States are supposed to push in the direction of encouraging Arab-African cooperation, especially in light of their preference to distribute the obligations of this cooperation between all Arab countries, although, by boycotting the activities of the African Union, some refrain from participating in this process.

II- Arab states which have active economic, cultural and investment relations in some African countries, given their successful development and investment projects on the territories of those countries, as well as their Islamic activities in the areas of “Daawa” and education of the Arabic language. These states prefer to implement the cooperation within a bilateral framework that they control its rhythm, determine its course, and enjoy - alone - the fruits of its achievements.

III- Arab states whose African relations -given their geographical remoteness and their preoccupation of their own sensitive issues and turbulent geographical neighborhood- are limited within the official framework or within an exclusive bilateral framework related to the protection of the interests of their communities in some African countries. Therefore, they do not feel the importance of Arab-African cooperation, and have no desire to participate in its activities or contribute to its obligations.
While it is expected that the Arab African States focus on the collective relations with the other states of the continent, and work to promote and encourage the process of Arab-African cooperation, whereas Gulf states, as donor countries, prefer to establish their relations with the African states through their bilateral activities and special funds, it is remarkable, however, that all Arab states - of whatever inclination – do not give the Arab-African relations the attention they deserve, nor have a clear vision or a precise political perception of the Arab-African cooperation concept and the means of activating it. This is reflected not only in their disregard and stalling movement to push the process of this cooperation, but also in the fact that most of Arab actions, which have been undertaken to frame this cooperation, stimulate its mechanisms and activate its projects (though some were implemented pursuant to decisions made at the summit level) lacked the seriousness and was unrealistic. They were mainly intended to political and media propaganda, and not to the actual implementation.

Consequently, it should be considered that the starting point in this regard is chiefly related to the existence of an Arab-African conviction that the relations between the parties are of an utmost importance. Relations must not be based on the exchange of political support through Arab financial aid, but on the strategic, economic, cultural and security interests which are shared by both parties. For this purpose, a crystallization of a political will is required – from the Arab party- to materialize and reflect this conviction, not only with connection to policies for consultation and exchange of views on issues of common interest, but also in the development, investment and technical cooperation plans and projects that mirror the common interests between the parties, and that should be feasible and easy to be implemented on the ground, on the basis of its conformity with the African conditions and Arab funding capabilities. All that have to be fulfilled through advancing the process of Arab-African cooperation – with its financial and technical instruments - as it embodies the significance of Arab political investment in the continent, and represents the operational framework for the Arab-African relations, especially, in light of the challenges of the strong Western influence, i.e. the United States and France in particular, in addition to the intense activity of China, Russia, Iran and Israel, as well as the growing role of some Latin American countries on the African arena.

As for the Arab Fund for Technical Assistance to African countries, it is clearly still suffering from many constraints and dual pressures between the hammer of failure of most Arab countries to pay their contributions in its budget for irrelevant reasons, and the anvil of the due debt owed to it by the General Secretariat. However, the Fund is still actively and professionally managing its functions, relying on its limited resources, and on its success to conclude agreements with some Arab and African financial institutions with the purpose of performing joint actions in the continent. Therefore, it is no longer acceptable to act toward the fund with the same restrictions, reservations and objections, especially that it has proven its ability to carry on its work, complete its functions and develop its Capabilities with the least resources over the past twenty years. Needless to say that it is the only fund working on the African arena under the umbrella of the League of Arab States, and carrying out its mission through the interface of joint Arab action. Accordingly, its work should be evaluated from a political perspective, and necessary decisions should be taken- at the appropriate level - to ensure the fulfillment of all the Arab countries of their obligations established in its budget. The debts owed to the fund by the Secretariat have to be regularly scheduled so that it may be able to carry out its duties, expand its activities, and open new horizons for its action areas.
